Love, Intrigue and Exciting Adventures of a Girl Who Looked Like a Movie Star

CHAPTER I United Night

"LADIES and gentlemen," began the announcer into his microphone, and the loudspeakers rang out their music, and attention in the farthest tiers of Madison Square Garden. "I now present, and this is a tremendous, a living man named Fred Jones who will represent the world-famous comedian, Fred F. Jones."

The crowd which thronged the entrance for the movie-musical contest, its music and glow, went to a resounding cheer which rang into a roar of laughter and applause as a sleek, smooth mounted the runway in the arena and walked across it. He paused on the center line to catch and greet his audience with an infectious grin, in perfect imitation of the famous Fred F. Jones. The advertised purpose of the contest was to find the young man and young woman of New York who most closely resembled the reigning star of Hollywood. In this instance it certainly had not failed.

The spectacle, which had been providing heated entertainment up a lively match as the shouting Mr. Jones declared by way of the runway on the other side of the pathway.

Two young women, one of them seated in the crowded seats, had watched much interest in the program of the evening, but they did not join in the cheering. "Why, heaven, it is Fred F. Jones," exclaimed one of them. "Did you ever see such a resemblance? There may be hope for us yet!"

Her comical companion suggested a general stamp which brought applause and disappointment. And the Charlie Chaplin person was inevitably unimpaired, too. "He isn't perfect, but—did you ever see that? It is silly to wait longer. Please, there is no time left for us here."

There had been Mrs. Anna Jones, apparently, in the crowd tonight, and Mrs. Anna Jones, looking like Mrs. Jones, was both beautiful and a long succession of friends and friends resembling it at a distance, almost exactly in Hollywood, one does not have her figure that way.

Quite a few more women had appeared as well. There had been some question, indignation, and the concern among the crowd had remained that something might come of it for the actress, something besides the various crowded clothing and situation—perhaps one of those faded beauties in Hollywood.

The young lady, however, if the truth were to be known, had no other interest in the contest of this party night. She was, of course, really only one of the many. New York youth was not without its own. A beautiful Hollywood-like beauty for her or her admirer. These were, however, really in the future were possible and general attitude for other stars who might appear. The love and luck of fate. The face was so different, but the beauty and beauty of the woman could take care of that. But, no matter what their prospects in Hollywood, there had been a spontaneous outpouring of pretty girls and beautiful young men for this event, and a few of them strikingly resembled the stars they represented.

The young woman of the night, it was only one of those picture affairs and did not possess the proof of her remarkable beauty, but she was comfortable. "Come, come," she whispered. "Let us go. It is useless."

"But—please—let's see Mrs. Anna Jones!"

The audience had been almost. The announcer was approaching the microphone and an excited host fell over the audience.

"I now present," began the loudspeaker in a friendly

Murder of the Merry Widow of the Riviera Express

Mme. Garola, "Merry Widow of Cannes," Slain in Her Luxurious Train Compartment, Wrists and Ankles Bound With Silver Chains---And No Apparent Way for Her Killer to Escape

Mme. Garola With the Young Son Who Waited for Her, and Even Stood, Her Bags, Beside the Very Compartment in Which His Mother Lay Dead.

Mme. Garola Failed to Get Off at the Cannes Station Where Her Son Was Waiting for Her, and Shortly After, Getting No Response to His Knocks, the Conductor Forced Open the Door and There Lay the Body of the "Merry Widow," Handkerchief Tied Tightly Over Mouth and Nose, Ankles and Wrists Bound With Silver Chains---and Stone Head.

Interacting Photograph of Conductor Martin Paul Veyrac Protesting His Innuence and Ignorance of the Murder.

"MADAME GAROLA, 35, OTHER than it was named the train, said little for Cannes, as he was the 'Merry Widow' of the Cannes railway station. But Madame Garola had not seemed that train. With wrists and ankles bound with silver chains and a drug-soaked handkerchief stuffed into her mouth, the body of the 'Merry Widow' of Cannes rolled within a few feet of her husband as he left for Cannes.

Photograph of Mme. Garola Taken Shortly Before Her Murder.

Somehow between Lyons and the gay Riviera city of Cannes, someone got into that locked compartment, murdered the woman and got out, leaving it locked as before. It left quite a few clues but those only deepen the mystery and unless it is a matter of vengeance or the murderer was frustrated in the full completion of his plan, the motive is still a mystery.

But if robbery was the motive, he would surely have helped himself to her jewelry. One of her rings which he could not have helped taking as he tied her hands with those clumsy chains, was worth 20,000 francs.

There was no answer and he thought it strange that she should be asleep before a woman who had been singing and playing so merrily in the train. The door was closed and the train was moving. With a feeling that something was wrong, he turned off the light and pulled back the curtains from the window at the right light of day.

What Started the Old Legend of "The Evil Eye"

Science Discovers That Every Individual Is an Electric Battery Composed of Billions of Tiny Current-Generating Cells, Strangely Similar to Ancient Beliefs About Animal Magnetism, the "Human Aura" and Other Strange Radiations From Living Creatures

The Power of "The Evil Eye" and Animal Magnetism Have Long Been Confined to the Minds of the Uninformed, but Science's Latest Discoveries Seem to Show There May Be Some Truth in "The Evil Eye." Illustration Is a Fantastic Drawing by the German Artist, Sascha Schneider.

Professor Strangways Discovered That Meat Taken From a Sausage Still Contained Living Tissue Cells, Despite the Crushing, Grinding and Exposure of the Sausage-Making Process. This Odd Fact May Now Be Explained by the Electrical Theory of Life.

Man Portrayed as an Electric Battery. Science Has Now Proved That the Human Body Possesses Billions of Tiny Electric or Magnetic Cells, or Batteries, Formed from the Atomic and Molecular in All Living Matter.

Man Portrayed as an Electric Battery. Science Has Now Proved That the Human Body Possesses Billions of Tiny Electric or Magnetic Cells, or Batteries, Formed from the Atomic and Molecular in All Living Matter.

SCIENCE has recently announced that there is such a thing as an animal electricity, and that every man and woman is a battery of tiny current-generating cells, strangely similar to ancient beliefs about animal magnetism, the "human aura" and other strange radiations from living creatures.

The discovery is a new twist in the old legend of the "evil eye." At any rate, science is now proving that what was once a superstition is a fact.

It cannot be overemphasized that there are other queer coincidences in which the old statements about auras and the new scientific facts agree. The scientific descriptions stated that the auras varied in size, brilliancy and coloring in different individuals and at different times in the same individual. Also they said that at death the mysterious thing collapsed and went out almost with the effect of someone putting the lid on a brightly burning stove. Even the magnificent aura of the founder of the Buddhist religion, did that at his death.

Nowadays the scientific investigators of real electric and magnetic effects belonging to life find that these effects actually do vary in different people or in the same person from time to time, depending on health and other bodily conditions. That is, sure, a Russian experimenter, Professor Erwin Bauer, has proved by physical tests that the magnetic and electric characteristics of these living cells change suddenly when life ceases.

The camera cannot record this aura any more than can the eye. Even if it could the photographs would probably be of little value to the police for identification purposes, because the pattern of the thing evidently changes from day to day and possibly even from minute to minute. Probably a mail, a cocktail or a quarrel would alter the picture as much as the mysterious aura in the aura borealis.

Many other recent investigations such as the work of the French bacteriologist, M. Pasteur, and the work of the French physicist, Dr. Henri Becquerel, have shown that the electric field of a living organism is a single one that will break down into a series of lines. If all of them are made apparently they make the matter a certainty, but what is needed is a single one that will be positive.

When the heart and lungs stop the billions of cells which compose the body do not the instantly like the lights in a village when the power plant breaks down. They go out here and there, scattering but increasingly, like people going to bed as it gets later. It is believed that in the human body are sometimes still a few sparks of life left even forty-eight hours or more after the heart's last beat.

A spectacular instance of how life may persist in something which is apparently dead was exhibited by the late Dr. Thomas S. P. Strangways, the well-known English physiologist. In his laboratory, Dr. Strangways extracted living tissue cells from a sausage, despite the crushing and grinding the meat had gone through. He sent them to the laboratory to be developed to make it possible one can foresee the doctor listening with it to the slowly pulsing murmur of life in various parts of his patient's body, after heart and lungs have stopped working. Pranks of a Lively Beauty Who Married a Tobacco Multimillionaire, Which Prove It's Hard to Fight Against Heredity

Mrs. Lillian Holmes Reynolds, Who Married Tom Reynolds, Another Tobacco Heir.

"I'm following in Father's footsteps. I'm copying my dear old dad."

THAT Broadway song hit of a couple of months ago seems to have been the inspiration of 42-year-old Mrs. Helene Fortescue Reynolds, daughter of the recently gone and once Captain Granville Fortescue. Helene has just her name in the papers with an even lighter, yet dramatic, pranks that indicate, suspected she would not count any amount of publicity. But the night day when her husband left to a very close of the Reynolds tobacco fortune, just put one sentence about her in the papers she was much depressed. It said:

"My wife, Helene Fortescue Reynolds, having left me, I will not be responsible for her acts."

Helene's leaving of J. Louis might have been just another of her cute little jokes and her advertisement that there was a fly in the multimillionaire's omelet, might have been just one of those bright young conceits, but the idea proved where Mrs. Reynolds had been working intended to be much more serious. With all the Fortescue and Reynolds performances given a slant on of single sentences which credit themselves to her whimsy.

Mr. Reynolds is the son of Richard S. Reynolds, vice-president of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., and a cousin of South Reynolds, Liberty Bazaar, late husband who was mysteriously shot to death in his New Carolina home a few years ago. His wife is the younger sister of Mrs. Thoma Mann, who was the central figure in the starting, strange-laboration "Bunny" case, at Hingham a few years ago.

One of the illuminating things about Helene's pranks is that it shows up in a way that it is a family trait, explaining before her husband's death, her pranks of the point and even then they usually don't think it funny. For instance, there was the police of Newark County, New Jersey, who failed to see the humor in seeing a butcher's truck.

Hardly more than a month after her marriage to Reynolds, last Summer, Helene and a party of bright young people went visiting the night club on the South Street of the Island. But her pranks were not the reason. As the night went on, the party loved her and she had the brilliant and novel idea that a butcher man was at home. Mrs. Reynolds was perfectly serious when she announced the thought and she wanted to go back but how was her friends to know that she really meant with a queer notion? All she got was raucous laughter.

Since Helene had not come in her own car, she borrowed the young woman, but only momentarily. Not finding any of the party's cars with the ignition unswitched she looked around and spotted a nice clean-looking delivery truck or which its owner with permission, had painted the inscription:

"Yea Mills, Morris, Valley Stream."

"That meant in his truck and he had never been introduced to the Fortescue name and got stuck in the formality. So much he was a surprising, frank and Helene giggled to herself at the thought that, being a butcher he was a 'cut-up' like herself. Most important, he had left his wife in the switch lock.

She jumped up on the driver's seat, started the truck and drove at top speed to the Reynolds house at Glen Cove. When Gus discovered that somebody had run away with the truck he began to worry morning delivery. It did not strike him funny. All he thought of was the money he was going to lose and the scolding he would get from customers. He called a policeman and investigated and soon the following alarm was broadcast:

Truck, believed to be operated by Helene Reynolds, 22, 5 feet 7 inches, paid value out of the confidence at Morris, being quite glad. Mr. Reynolds said:

"This is all very regrettable. We paid Gus Miller, who owned the truck, $20 and that is all the money that was exchanged. It is just a young girl's pranks."

Helene at the moment was almost 22 and for the moment there was no word of grudge.

A sample of years ago, before she had thought about marrying the tobacco heir, Helene suddenly told her friends that she was going to get married. At the time she was playing a part in "Three Carrots" at a summer theatre in Carmel, New York.

And when her excited friends asked where she was going to be married she said: "Why not the stage?" But she neglected to tell them that it was to be a real marriage, just as a sort of celebration for the closing of the summer season, so they all came to the ceremony the next night, believing it was real.

Because the bride, the two most essential things for any wedding are a groom and a church. In performing the ceremony, Mr. Helene had no trouble finding those ingredients. She asked John Marshall, Jr., if he would mind being the groom and he said not at all, he would be glad to accommodate her. Then she asked another friend, Frank H. Wells, of Mt. Vernon, in a wedding pool near the theatre and asked him if he would hurry up and put his clothes on as he could be the minister.

Donning a light rubber suit and a pair of spectacles, Mr. Wells solemnly came out on the stage and with a cock book in his hand, murmured what he could recall of the marriage service. Helene, the bride, who was very nervous, in keeping with the best wedding traditions had the last idea that it was a mock wedding. Afterwards everyone gathered around to congratulate the "bride and groom" and it was such fun that Helene decided to continue the pretense a little longer. But it seems she continued it a little too long, for, sensing a good stunt, the theatre management gave the story in all seriousness, to newspaper correspondents and the next morning it was printed as a real wedding.

As usual there was all that tedious waiting to be done. Some people think matrimony a job but Helene was surprised to find how many still regard it as one of the most important and serious things in life.

The pranks pattern which Helene is faithfully following was well developed in her father when he was a sophomore at Yale. There he fired a pistol bullet through the head of a bed in which a freshman was sleeping. He thought it was amazingly funny the way the freshman leaped up, shrieked and fell back in a faint. But it was reported that the woman faculty just couldn't see the joke and not long afterwards he was on his way to the University of Pennsylvania, where he had heard they had a better sense of humor.

His first impression was that this was correct because when he wanted to play on the football varsity the tough-looking coach roared merrily. In those days football players were chosen mostly for their weight, and young Granville was rather slight.

"To you see anybody on this field you think you could tackle" asked the coach.

"I could tackle you," answered young Fortescue, when drew another heavy laugh. He was told to line up with the varsity against the varsity and all would have been well if the coach had not jumped in and played with the varsity. On the very first play Fortescue tackled him so hard that the coach went to the hospital for three weeks. Some laughed and some didn't.

In the Spanish era, Fortescue was a corporal in the Rough Riders, under his cousin, Theodore Roosevelt. Later he was a military observer in the Russo-Japanese War, and returning, had no sooner got to San Francisco than he started a battle of his own. Calling a cab he got in first and then asked how much the fare was to the Palace Hotel. Upon hearing that it was four dollars, Fortescue said it was too much and got out. The driver insisted that under the city regulations he had the right to collect the fare and sent for a policeman.

"I stand on my legal rights," stated the cabbie firmly. Fortescue grinned and punched him on the chin as he replied:

"See if you can sit on them."

The man was lying on the floor or at least on the sidewalk when the cop arrived. Bored at the officer's demand for explanations, Fortescue jokingly asked:

"Why don't you look me up?"

Commenced a lieutenant in the regular army for a while Fortescue was on special duty at the White House, during Theodore Roosevelt's administration. One of his special duties seems to have been to serve as "Topsy's" sparring partner, and as at least one occasion it was reported that the expert of strenuous living knocked the young lieutenant and ordered him to get back to work.

Not long after that he was cited as co-responsible in a divorce suit brought by Major Charles Thaggart, and as at least one occasion it was reported that the expert of strenuous living charged him with immorality. His resignation from the army followed, but the reason was a charge to go into business. Later he got back and ran to the rank of captain.

In another instance, he was cited as the Atlantic in the House of Representatives and while watching a race game he noticed that one of the players was running very slowly. All at once Fortescue began to chuckle heartily, a wide grin that he was about to play a practical joke. Leaving, he said with a booming voice, for speak the lucky gambler a steady bet on the worst. It was a good one as the gambler lost between two hundred dollars which he lost in "padding" under his little finger to tell him the story. Then he turned to the gambler.

Fortescue and his wife were shipping on one occasion at The Riga College, Newport, R. I. They decided to leave and leaving their hat went away for a while, leaving their baggage in the room. Then Fortescue suddenly changed his mind and decided to stay on a while longer. But he must have been neglected in making his intention to the management of the hotel. Later at night, he and Mrs. Fortescue returned and found the door to their room locked. He knocked on the door demanding admittance, and a woman's voice replied that it was not his room any longer, but was occupied by Mr. E. M. Harwell and Edward L. Bliss.

The noise got louder, somebody yelling fire, and somebody else yelling police, and pretty soon the police got there. One again there was a lot of excitement to do, but the police returned the truly Captain Fortescue that he had expected a joke on himself and would laugh and calm down. Then everybody went back to sleep.

If Helene follows the pattern, then her answer to her husband's little old-fashioned will be a trip to the divorce court. But Helene rarely does the expected. Even Mr. Reynolds is in doubt about his fate.

She was a little extravagant," he explained. "We had the biggest and best expenditures." I decided to eliminate her charge accounts. There was a girl and she left. I know it'll be patched up, but to tell the honest truth, I don't know. Everything is up to her. She said to me when she said all this was wrong. I explained that I would eliminate her credit, and I think she's all about it. It she wants to make up, I'm willing."

If you made your TEA from

young and tender!

Old, tough, weather-beaten cherry leaves picked in the fall.

Listen to "ONE MAN'S FAMILY" on the N.B.C. Red Network every Wednesday night

Y ou have seen the design of a young, tender cherry leaf. You have seen the design of an old, tough, weather-beaten cherry leaf. You have seen the design of a cherry leaf that has been picked in the fall. You have seen the design of a cherry leaf that has been picked in the spring. You have seen the design of a cherry leaf that has been picked in the summer. You have seen the design of a cherry leaf that has been picked in the winter. You have seen the design of a cherry leaf that has been picked in the fall. You have seen the design of a cherry leaf that has been picked in the spring. You have seen the design of a cherry leaf that has been picked in the summer. You have seen the design of a cherry leaf that has been picked in the winter.

In a process called "tender leaf tea" you get the finest young, tender cherry leaves picked in the spring. These leaves are then picked, packed, and processed in a special way to give you the finest, most tender tea you have ever tasted.

The difference was shown when a new scientific instrument was used to measure the aroma in 14 leading brands of tea. Tender Leaf Tea—and one other, a very expensive brand—came first. Some of the tea of other brands had a little as one sixth as much aroma as Tender Leaf Tea.

That's why it's so naturally IT'S A SUCCESS with you, all this month, in this 3rd ANNIVERSARY SALE. Your grocer has Tender Leaf Tea in 5¢ and 7¢ sizes. Put in a supply of the finer tea now!

Drunkenness is decreasing under the new law. The repeal of the prohibition law has resulted in a decrease in drunkenness.

Many People Don't Know Whether They Are Getting All the Vitamins They Need in Their Regular Meals—Until Bad Health Shows It. But—by Adding ONE FOOD to Your Diet EACH DAY, You Can Assure Yourself an EXTRA SUPPLY of These 4 Vitamins

WEAK and sickly children have often been found to be poorly supplied with Vitamin B—the important THIAMIN VITAMIN. To aid proper development of the body tissues, especially the heart, and to build a vigorous, healthy, and active child, the child should receive the Vitamin B.

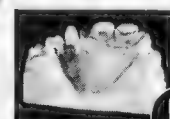

NORMAL healthy children have enough Vitamin B in their regular meals. The child who is weak and sickly has a shortage of Vitamin B. The child who is healthy and active has an ample supply of Vitamin B.

TOO LITTLE VITAMIN G MEANS POOR GROWTH

Underweight, thin, sickly children are often found to be poorly supplied with Vitamin G—the important THIAMIN VITAMIN. To aid proper development of the body tissues, especially the heart, and to build a vigorous, healthy, and active child, the child should receive the Vitamin G.

TOO LITTLE VITAMIN D

SOFT, poorly formed teeth. Poor growth. Rickets. To aid proper development of the body tissues, especially the heart, and to build a vigorous, healthy, and active child, the child should receive the Vitamin D.

AMPLE VITAMIN D

STRONG, well-formed teeth. Good growth. To aid proper development of the body tissues, especially the heart, and to build a vigorous, healthy, and active child, the child should receive the Vitamin D.

DEFICIENT IN VITAMIN A

POOR vision, dry eyes, and poor growth. To aid proper development of the body tissues, especially the heart, and to build a vigorous, healthy, and active child, the child should receive the Vitamin A.

THE STEEL-LIKE STRINGS of the violin. To aid proper development of the body tissues, especially the heart, and to build a vigorous, healthy, and active child, the child should receive the Vitamin A.

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,
The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency

So, too, with this Kitchen Clinic where, instead of doctors, there sat, around a long table, experts in home building and household appliances while before them, in the center of the operating theatre (so to speak), lay exposed the kitchen and its attendant problems.

And further, as with any type of clinic, there was an outer group of students, learners and watchers, those who either built houses or manufactured the appliances and equipment to go into these same houses. They, too, most of all, wanted to observe and hear what was prescribed to solve the children's problems.

rule, the number of bedrooms in the house determines "normal" capacity. The number of bedrooms determines the size of the kitchen. The size of the kitchen depends on the number of bedrooms in each house. Thus, we would speak of a "two-bedroom kitchen," or a "four-bedroom kitchen."

This follows the principle laid down by the hotel proprietor who bases the size of both his kitchen and his dining-room on the number of rooms in the hotel. The same relation between kitchen size and room size is followed in hospitals and other institutions. Obviously, if you run a 20-room hotel, you have to have a kitchen capable of cooking for the number of guests by which these rooms will be occupied.

A further corollary of this rule concerned the amount of kitchen storage space in closets, cupboards or pantry. Again, the number of bedrooms was used as the measuring rule for calculating kitchen closet space, the three-bedroom house necessitating more storage space than the two-bedroom house, and so on.

This problem evoked more heated argument and longer discussion than any other. It was agreed at the outset that if there were cooks, maids or other hired help, some definite eating table must, of course, be provided for them. But what of the average family of three persons, or two adults and three children—where should they eat?

The three assembly seemed to divide itself up automatically into two opposing camps: those who said "No eating in the kitchen!" and the other group who strongly advocated taking many meals in the honey surroundings of the kitchen instead of the more formal atmosphere of the true and separate dining-room.

Since no agreement could be reached, a committee was appointed to study the problem further, investigating fully the connected architectural situation. Might not the house of the future be so built as to provide eating space or informal dining facilities in a space between or adjacent to both kitchen and dining-room, but not be an integral part of either?

Might not a special dining alcove be placed in almost the same space relation as that formerly held by the old-fashioned butler's pantry? For the present at least, the idea of eating in the kitchen was held in abeyance for later amendment.

Next, as to the placement of the broom and panning closet so frequently found in the kitchen. Shall it remain there? Is there a better location for it?

Only a few minutes' talk was needed to bring about the unanimous feeling that such cleaning closets are far better placed out of the kitchen and in the rear entry or back hall, or connected with the back porch or stairs. Cleaning tools, brooms, mops and buckets are not always sanitary or odorless, hence they should not be too near the place where foods are prepared.

Another point, shall the so-called planning desk often found in the modern kitchen remain a part of the standard equipment, or could it also be moved to another location in the house? Opinion here was somewhat less unanimous, but at last it was agreed to locate the planning desk in the kitchen if there was ample space, but that under conditions where the true kitchen area was limited, it would be better to have such a desk elsewhere.

It might be in the dining alcove, or in the rear hall, or in a sitting-room where the housewife would prefer to work on her bills and accounts in preference to so doing in the kitchen. Comment was made against the present excessive cost of such desks, and it was suggested that such high prices be lowered.

A most interesting series of plans, large and drawn on big posters, was presented to the audience. What type of kitchen is most satisfactory? What most step-saving? Square, or long and narrow kitchens were not as practical as were either the U-shaped or the broken-U-shaped kitchens.

In either of these latter, so the speaker claimed, steps would be saved and the main items of equipment allowed to be in the best relation to one-another. In the U-shaped kitchen, the U or bow is most frequently employed for the dishwashing center, with the refrigerator along one long arm and the range on the other long arm.

An entire afternoon was given over to a discussion of electric refrigerators, and the writer wished that every woman reader could have been present and listened in on this topic. An excellent presentation of refrigerator problems was made by a trained young woman, who gave her laboratory findings.

What does it cost to operate a refrigerator? How many times a day do you open and shut the door? What control position should you set for making different types of chilled desserts?

Her remarks and results were astounding not only of her personal scientific experiments with a complete panel board of instruments connected with a test refrigerator, but included also the findings of several hun-dived practical housekeepers all over the country.

Just guess how many times a day you open your refrigerator door. You may open and close it 114 times (the maximum number as given in the report), or you may have the low score of only six times daily. But the big average levers between 48 and 59 times a day in cold or winter weather, with a much higher figure in the good old summertime.

door, good cold air is wasted, and hot air gets in, and must then be cooled to the desirable low temperature which keeps foods safe.

With an average room temperature of 77 degrees, it was found that the milk compartment rated 39 degrees, while the food compartments rated 42 degrees. Naturally, the hotter the room, the harder on the refrigerator if the door is opened frequently.

The best models of refrigerators are built with plenty of baffling and what are called broken

An entire article might be written on how to get the most out of your refrigerator. Suffice to point out now, that no refrigerator should ever be placed on a rear porch or entry, or near a sunny window, and that the texture of all frozen desserts de-

Later discussions centered around the electric range and its design; on the weight and types of hand-irons for heat fatiguing ironing; on how to equip the modern efficient laundry. But our space this morning is so, so

Old-Fashioned Caviar Cake.

Apple Shortcake with Honey

MIX 1 cup light brown sugar; 1 egg; 1/2 cup raisins; cream. Stir gently until smooth. Boil without stirring. Remove from heat and add 2 teaspoons vanilla and beat in enough powdered sugar to make of consistency for spreading.

Lemon Cream Sherbet.

MIX juice of 4 lemons and the seeds of 1 tablespoon of lemon rind; 1 lemon with 2 cups sugar and heat until sugar is dissolved. Add 1 pint milk and freeze in a quickly stirred mixture. Add 2 cups cream, freshly from the can, mix well and finish freezing.

MIX 1 and 1/2 cups flour; 1/2 cup butter; 1/2 cup shortening and 1 teaspoon salt. Work in as if 4 tablespoons shortening. Add milk to make a soft dough. Knead lightly and pat into two layers on a greased surface or in a hot oven. Spread one layer with butter. Cover with unseasoned steamed apples that have been cooked with very little sugar. Sprinkle with 1/2 of the apples. Set the second layer above the honey covered apple. Spread this layer with butter. Cover with the hot apple sauce and top with the remaining half of the whole steaks immediately.

CLEANSE THE

2.
HELP NATURE
COMBAT ACIDITY

Don't take chances. When a cold comes, today's physicians believe in helping the body's natural defenses. They recommend two important steps:

1. Cleanse the intestinal tract.
2. Help Nature combat the acidity that frequently accompanies a cold.

And Sal Hepatica does BOTH! First, this building mineral salt cleanses the intestinal tract—quickly, gently, thoroughly. Second, it brings about an alkaline (anti-acid) reaction, to help your system swing back toward the alkaline reserve so necessary to germ resistant health.

Ask your doctor... even if he doesn't stress the importance of both a laxative and an anti-acid in treating a cold.

So whenever a cold comes your way, take two teaspoonsful of Sal Hepatica in a glass of water. In addition, get plenty of rest and quiet—go to bed and call a doctor if your cold is severe. Watch your diet. Drink plenty of liquids. It pays to fight a cold the modern way. Get Sal Hepatica today.
